It's very nearly April, and if you haven't checked out the AS220 Resident/Volunteer art show hanging through March, you've still got a couple of days. At the opening party someone mentioned that it was more of a museum than a show. At least 18 artists of varying expertise and notoriety have packed the walls with all manner of things... dangling rag dolls with gems for genitals, a cabinet full of bullets and bugs, a pair of onion-eyeglasses, the iconography of the salt shaker, a big-ugly-guy-on-the-floor... and a whole other bunch of evocative, disturbing, amusing and mystical images and objects, filling up a funky little living room (for lack of a better word) that's shared by a growing family of artists who are making a daily commitment to live in this town.

This show has the feel of a whole community coming into its own. There are a number of people (this writer included) who've never had visual work shown, yet our intrepid gropings coexist seamlessly with the sure-handed efforts of our more practiced friends. The new building is "ours" at last, but the space has always been.
